Water: In Focus

In this world, not everybody is as fortunate as us, Canadians. For example: people who live in Africa do not have the access to clean, purified water. In this photo, you see that Canadians are willing to lend a helping hand to the Africans. The Canadian's hand (left side) represents a water filter; by helping the Africans filter their water, they will finally have the opportunity to clean, wash, eat, and drink with fresh clean water.

I decided to use hands as a filter because I wanted to show that not everything has to be done through technology (considering technology seems to be taking over). I feel that by using raw hands in the photo, it demonstrates the hardship people are willing to go through to help other people in need. As the water flows down the Canadian's hand to the African's hand, the contaminated water slowly filters to pure clean water.
